To whom it may concern,

I am 24 years old and suffer from paruresis. I have had this condition since I was very young (around age 5). I have worked with a doctor who specialized in social phobias, and have made a lot of progress -- enough to live a semi normal life. In the past I was unable to use any restroom except the one at my home. Today, I can use many public ones. However, I am not 100% cured and there are still situations where I cannot go.

I have never used drugs in my life. However, I fear the day will come when I lose my job, not because I failed a urine test, but because my condition prevented me from producing one. I understand the need to make sure employees are not using drugs, and I support this whole heartedly. However, all I ask is that options are giving to those who can't give a urine test.

I understand this condition seems odd to those who do not have it, but please understand that if these regulations stand, many innocent, drug free people will be denied employment for no other reason than not being able to urinate on demand.

Thank you for your time.
